Chaucer's Silent Italy on JSTOR

It is certain that Chaucer had access to Boccaccio's Filostrato and Teseida because of the quality of imitations in The House of Fame and Anelida and Arcite. During this Italian business trip for the king to arrange for a settlement of Genoese merchants these scholars say it is likely that sometime in 1373 Chaucer made contact with Petrarch or Boccaccio. It has been speculated that it may have been a redaction of's 'Dit dou lyon,' a story about courtly love a subject about which Chaucer frequently wrote.
