Heinle & Heinle - Reflection in an intermediate care team

Candidates write reflections (narrative summaries) following each section of the case study where candidates administer reading assessments to an elementary student.
 Candidates write reflections of their preparation and instruction of a content reading lesson.
 Candidates write reflections following each case study lesson (two taught following diagnostic process).
 Self-reflection questions are posed as part of the mid-term and final projects.

In EEE117 Teaching Mathematics in the Elementary School, candidates complete reflections on the mathematics plans that they selected from PDS sites.
 Block 1 Interns are required practitioners in social studies, language arts, math and reading. The interns are required to write a written reflection after each of these lessons and submit to their instructors for feedback. They also confer once with their mentors over these formal lessons.
 Block 1 Interns write a reflection on the practice TWS and receive feedback from faculty. Interns do a Foster 7 practice session. Look at examples of well-written entries for this section and draft sample entries. Interns meet approximately once every week with their site coordinators to reflect on their performance at the PDS sites and often the lesson evaluation forms are reviewed at this time. These evaluations are used to provide feedback to the intern and suggestions and suggestion for improvement from the site coordinators. Block 2 and 3 interns address a specific set of reflection questions for every content area lesson they teach, video tape at least one lesson and self-assess after they observe the tape. Additionally, during Block 3 interns keep a "reflective" journal.

 In EEE117 Teaching English Language Arts in the Elementary School, Block 2 Language Arts interns write a reflective analysis for their lesson plans, have reflective journal responses, and write a reflective analysis piece as part of the literacy portfolio. Candidates respond in journals to what was taught in class, why it is important in teaching, and how it will look in the classroom.

Candidates reflect on lessons they teach; feedback from course instructors helps them improve the quality of their reflections.

PDS Coordinators visit with interns after observing their lessons in the classroom and ask questions to help the candidates reflect at a higher level of thought.

At the end of a course, candidates reflect on their responses to a beginning-of-course knowledge base assignment and discuss how their responses have changed over the semester and why.

Block 2 interns write a reflection on the practice TWS and receive feedback from faculty. Interns meet approximately once every week with their site coordinators to reflect on their performance at the PDS sites and often the lesson evaluation forms are reviewed at this time. This provides another opportunity for interns to reflect and receive ideas and suggestion for

On the other hand I rarely write as a hobby, most of the times are tasks of the university. The committee is most active between January and May; tasks take place at convention and much can be done from home. I enjoyed not only writing the open letter, which in I feel my writing, being one of my strongest attributes served well, but to create something that also included visuals beyond my simple talents of art, and also my love of music, was thoroughly satisfying.

Outstanding Interpretation and Award of Excellence entries then go on to represent California in the final National PTA judging round.

Reflection (C#)

I did a visual check after everyone had found a place and asked them to readjust if necessary, separating children who were sitting too close together. I generally do not discriminate against a book based on its page count, so this is either a product of coincidence or of percentages. I used to be discouraged if, a year after reading a book, I could barely remember the content.

Write to Be Read: Reading, Reflection and Writing. Teacher's Manual by William R. Smalzer

There are many different ways that teachers can include reflection to satisfy evaluation programs and enhance their , but the best method may be one where the teacher reflects frequently. My reasoning was simply that through these reviews I could help other people who are interested in reading only a few books per year focus on books that are worth their while, while helping them avoid the mountains of trash on the bookstore shelves. At the time of reading and writing I was transport to another scene I concentrate fully on what I read or write, if it is a story I feel like part of the characters.
