The Festiniog Railway Company was able to obtain compensation in 1972, after the second-longest legal battle in British legal history, having taken eighteen years and two months. If you look closely, you can see the old railway tracks and tunnel which are now flooded a couple of times a day by the reservoir which rises and falls 18 feet and power station. Board of Trade returns for 1884 show a police inspector was based at the company's head office.
