Okinawa: The Last Battle of World War II (Paperback)

This account has great authenticity because Leckie was a Marine combat veteran of WW2 in the Pacific. Harmon proposed that Iwo Jima in the Volcano Islands be seized in January 1945 and Okinawa in June, simultaneously with a strike at Luzon. S Joint Chiefs of Staff—expected Okinawa to be the last battle of World War II.

He proposed three courses of action and ultimately the division and brigade commanders decided to retreat further south.

[Okinawa: Last Battle of World War II]

It would be the largest simultaneous amphibious landing of the Pacific War with two Marine and two Army divisions landing abreast on eight miles of beach. Before the embarkation of troops for Okinawa, most of the Tenth Army's combat historians, as they were called, had joined at various points in the Pacific the units whose part in the coming battle they were to record. But what Japanese soldiers lacked in number, they made up for in loyalty.
