Trying to understand the organisation of justice in Shetland before Magnus Lawmender's time is a near-hopeless task. Prior to the 1850s the tingstead was a holm in the loch, linked to the mainland by a causeway; since then, following the draining of water from the loch, it has been a grassy promontory. The phrase is of origin, is mentioned in , and was likely borrowed from tenets of ancient provincial Norwegian laws such as the.
