Depths below depths: the intensification, multiplication, and spread of capitalism's destructive force from Marx's time to ours

This incidentally in why Marx spends so much time showing us the relevance of each abstraction! Despite a huge Weberian scholarship no-one seems at all clear about the method which Weber used to construct his ideal types. Karl Marx was born on the 5th of May 1818 in the small German town of Trier. Capitalism could only develop by constant transformation.

Civil War Years

Constant revolutionising of production, uninterrupted disturbance of all social conditions, everlasting uncertainty and agitation distinguish the bourgeois epoch from all earlier ones. Looked at across the whole economy the transformation was more varied. Campbell, Capitalism in Britain, 1981, although its framework is one we implicitly criticise here.

Marx in His Time—and in Ours

Column 4 reflects the way in which at a political level capitalism has increasingly bound itself by networks of various ties. And if we were to try to count the toll of war since 1945 our estimates would be just as horrific and the margin of error just as wide.
