Ann and Amelia (1781 ship)

Knowing that Bacchante was not fast, M'Donnell, rather than chasing the schooner, pretended to take flight, luring the privateer into chasing him. In May 1806 Mediator was on the. The reward of 4 guineas paid to the rescuer and 1 guinea to anyone allowing a body to be treated on his premises soon gave rise to a widespread scam among the down-and-outs of London: one would pretend to be rescued and the other the rescuer - and they would share the proceeds.

Ann and Amelia (1781 ship)

It was devised for bestowal on officers and men of the merchant marine and fishing fleets in recognition of acts of exceptional gallantry in wartime. By 1970 it had considered over 20,000 cases.

Mediator and a number of other warships and transports arrived on 14 and 15 January from Vigo. The British captured two French schooners undergoing fitting as privateers, and an American ship and a British schooner, both prizes to French privateers. The medal was at first issued in bronze, 1893-1900; then in silver only, 1900-17; and finally, from 1917, in silver and bronze.

French corvette Bacchante (1795)

By 1801 Bacchante was back in naval service and at Havre under the command of lieutenant de vaisseau Bellenger. Circa July 1805 Commander Randall M'Donnell assumed command of Bacchante.

Dacres also had the French schooner Dauphin, which he had just captured. When Blamey, who was in sick quarters, heard that Mediator was going to lead the attack, he hurried to join her. The first step was to send in Bacchante's boats to take a round tower that was protecting the harbour.

Ann and Amelia (1781 ship)

Main article: In 1803 the EIC employed Ann and Amelia again, this time to take a cargo from to Britain. Contains brief details of case number, name of claimant, name or description of person's rescued and details of award recommended.
