It has been traditionally held that by the 14th century the dynamic force of civilization had been spent and that the late Middle Ages were characterized by decline and decay. When sects were defined as heretical—, , and others—because of their repudiation of Roman Catholic concepts of Christian essence, they had to go into hiding or were pushed into enclaves beyond the reach of the custodians of official teaching. A good rule of thumb is that if a reading is older than you are, there is probably something newer.
