Morley, Thomas 1557

Of troublea minde for every sore, swete Musick hath a salve therfore. Shakespeare's music tapped into the popular repertory of the Elizabethan period—the tunes heard in taverns, on street corners, in the theater, and accompanying dancing.

Thomas Morley

His output was distinguished not only by its volume but also by its quality, as four Grammy awards and two Edison awards testify. Some years later he came to the music summer school at Dartington, where the set-up suited him; he came year after year, and loved it so much that we found it difficult to get him to leave. This edition: Urtext, Soft cover, Limited Edition.

Facsimiles of these tunes are all available. Ward has an article about this tune. His lute variations on Go from my Window get their own mixed consort arrangement by Morley's contemporary Richard Allison.
